Miracle Drain Cleaner Discovered in Mayan Tomb

Dear cyber reader, OK, OK I lied about the Mayan tomb. But my partner, Geneva, has discovered a solution to a problem faced by espresso bar owners the world over. Ground coffee gets into the drains and clogs them if left to accumulate.

The traditional remedy is to pour boiling water down the espresso machine drain line each evening at closing. It is an ineffective treatment, and you could suffer (more) minor burns.

Espresso bar owners need never flush another drain! Announcing the discovery of "BIO-CLEAN-the friendly bacteria waste eliminator". We have tested it. The stuff eats coffee grounds like Homer eats donuts. Get some from your professional plumbing supply, now.

Readers that were expecting a more minute analysis of espresso technique I do apologize for a brief foray into operations. But, this little column will bring so much happiness to espresso professionals struggling with drains that I couldn't resist.

Ciao for now.
